The Prairie Light Review

Volume 32 Number 1 Article 28

10-1-2010

Passage

Patricia Gangas College of DuPage

Follow this and additional works at: http://dc.cod.edu/plr

Recommended Citation

Gangas, Patricia (2011) "Passage," The Prairie Light Review: Vol. 32: No. 1, Article 28. Available at: http://dc.cod.edu/plr/vol32/iss1/28

This Selection is brought to you for free and open access by the College Publications at Digital Commons @C.O.D.. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Prairie Light Review by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons @C.O.D.. For more information, please contact koteles @cod.edu.

Passage

Patricia Gangas

We were friends long ago, it was then I dreamt we could hold back the quarrelsome world:
I thought you would understand my soul—that land of heavenly fire.
We drank wine,
I read you poems.
I wanted to be that woman with a sun-lit heart, wrapping you in the warm blankets of my thought.

You brought me tulips and wildflowers, a gold etched heart from Greece.
You told me my name was like traces of light, protected me from the vulgar world.

My hopes for happiness were great, my visions without limits. I knew I would worship you weaving you daily into my flesh; walking out to meet you, never asking how far.

Now, it's hard to remember the days of singing, the many journeys of my endless imagination, for mountain upon mountain has risen between us. We are strung together with a thin thread.

These days I water my garden, write poems you never see.

My way alone is difficult.