The lights dim,
like a guy with a trick knee that gives way a bit, so Felipe and his friend head back inside and I'm off to the balcony where I sit and look down at the djembe, waiting

Kristina Noel Kroger

a green pane of glass, green, green, wine-bottle green hugs me close—I'm getting drunk on the loneliness.
This sweet, sloshing, burning liquid

Stumbling bumbling in a neon night, hedonism at its finest sweet pleasures like peaches on my tongue is the mystery in the dark alley

Ah, metropolis of sin, I walk your shadowed avenues giggling with my shadow
