4-1-2010

Superman

Elizabeth Whiteacre
College of DuPage, whiteacr@cod.edu

Follow this and additional works at: http://dc.cod.edu/plr

Recommended Citation
Available at: http://dc.cod.edu/plr/vol30/iss2/25

This Selection is brought to you for free and open access by the College Publications at DigitalCommons@C.O.D.. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Prairie Light Review by an authorized administrator of DigitalCommons@C.O.D.. For more information, please contact koteles@cod.edu.
He clips 90 lbs of steel discs to his waist with a belt made of leather and chain, and I can't help but stare. He steps swiftly on the triceps dip, feet and elbows brace the weight, Marine tattoos flex when he grips the metal handles.

We both know he’s in good shape, he’s confident, he’s earned it—I see him daily doing complicated routines. He’s there before I arrive, after I leave. His hair’s oiled and manicured as it was, I imagine, when he was in his twenties.

No doubt, he’s been sweating five to seven days a week for maybe seventy years. He focuses on something in the distance; I’m enamored with the Geisha on his upper arm. He doesn’t check the mirror, so I don’t know if he’s aware his range of motion is barely an inch today—I’m sure he concentrates on the muscles’ burn each flexion, every dip, feels the steel bounce between his tense thighs, just as they did when he was twenty five.