Eubanks: God's Feelings

God's Feelings

Emily Eubanks

colorful little fishes swimming about never think about god go ahead, ask and they'll laugh until their scales flesh open, until they die and they'll ask for their laughing gills to be tightened with wax for infinite laughter this does not require things that cannot be seen, they exist as they exist, which I read somewhere is mostly in our dimension here on earth sweet pleasures like peaches on the tongue I wonder if god wishes he could ask the colorful little fishes for some company it must get lonely making rough drafts of everything over and over again.
