Stages

Dodi Dolendi

College of DuPage

Follow this and additional works at: http://dc.cod.edu/plr

Recommended Citation

Available at: http://dc.cod.edu/plr/vol36/iss2/66

This Selection is brought to you for free and open access by the College Publications at DigitalCommons@COD. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Prairie Light Review by an authorized administrator of DigitalCommons@COD. For more information, please contact koteles@cod.edu.
She is a dancer.
Pink satin-clad feet are her storytellers.
The spotlight and wooden floor beckon her solo performance.
Her heart pounds as she takes center stage.
Her soul craves the kinship between movement and music,
pain and pleasure,
feet and floor,
artist and audience.

She is a dancer.
Though her limbs are less limber,
her inner grace, passion, and desire still move to the symphonic voice in her head.
She still sees herself dancing, from a distance now,
like a child watches the ballerina twirl inside a jewel box.

She is a dancer.
She exchanges the painful hours
of toes banging en pointe for endless days
of fingers tapping out words.
The desk light and white space beg a new solo performance,
for another unseen audience.
She chooses metaphors over movement.
She gives up the dancer’s excitement at the curtain call for the writer’s more permanent thrill after she dances across the printed page.

She is a dancer. She takes to the stage. For she has a story to tell.