This laid-back approach towards funerals has given me a false sense of security. I've been conditioned to believe that funerals are just boring and stupid, and death is just something you put on the calendar. I roll my eyes when I hear a family member had passed away, knowing what's to come. It's not so bad. People always freak out over death, like it doesn't happen every day around the world. But I know better. It's not as scary when you come face-to-face with it so often.
