The Proper Mousing Cat is Buried With Soldiers

And the Philistines seized him and gouged out his eyes, and brought him down to Gaza, and bound him with bronze fetters; and he ground at the mill in the prison.
- Judges 16:21

The doctor has warned against prose, poetry could be fatal — too like swallowing one’s own tongue. Puffy, strangled, as rigor mortis sets in: a Tantalus pose, with book of verse in hand. So he has retired to the sun: a lawn chair, orange and green, frayed warp and weft nestling into the dirt. The garden once grew with lettuce, parsley and carrots for vision. Now grass has grown up around the rusting red lawn mower so little depends upon. The children have grown too, gone away, a murder of crows in the Basho tree, ripe with brown fruit.

From the open patio door, saxophone Lester Leaps In, the sound of spit air over reed, disc player on infinite repeat. The open glass door frames where she used to be, preparing Shirley Horn’s Beef and Beer, her too stiff pavane around the kitchen just before the beginning of sunset. In early summertime she sang “Una voce poco fa,” or at least humming the tune. Lester Young, sax man, reduced to vamping off stage.

The tarot cards were always stored above the heart. To be laid late on Saturday night. After making love, perhaps. The smell of Sulphur from struck matches, and sweat, and the salt feel of love knots woven into the Persian rug against her lower back and shoulder blades. A coded message:

Snart: The Proper Mousing Cat is Buried With Soldiers come and kiss me, once, quickly. The proper mousing cat would purr and purr and purr, buried now out back with the plastic plank-footed soldiers. The youngest child dug a tiger trap, excavated lost languages, spoke in new tongues. Funeral black, please, for the soldiers and cat, he said.

Here is the view to the west from the garden chair now: the neighbour with an oddly curved spine from the decade spent with children perched on her hips, though also climbing mountains at odd angles, commas for eyebrows. Bent, now over her full heads of lettuce and climbing sweet peas and he’s imagining her well-kept lawn. He knows her for her walk, and brown-spotted skin under sunglasses, straw hat, shorts the colour of tuberose plants that nestle against the house. In the lawn chair, he contemplates in London. His three languages shored-up in coves for later recovery. Yes, this beard must surely start to grow again what with all the sun. Lester leaps in

Tequila

Single life is—tequila with lime, shots of travelers, jacks, diamonds, and then spades, holding back aces—mocking jokers paraplegic aged tumblers of the night trip.
Poltergeist define as another frame, a dancer in the corner shadows.
Single lady don’t eat the worm. beneath the belt, bashful, very loud, yet unspoken.
Your man lacks verb, a traitor to your skin.
