When I Die

Karen Forslin-Bojnansky

College of DuPage

Follow this and additional works at: http://dc.cod.edu/plr

Recommended Citation

Available at: http://dc.cod.edu/plr/vol38/iss2/57
Farewell to Paris
Mardelle Fortier

Say good-bye.
The arched bridges will always be there.

Across a branch of the Seine on Ile St-Louis those narrow streets will remain and old, tall beautiful homes.

In the bookstalls along curving quays we found long-lost books and rescued them.
In open-air cafés we could drink wine (Sancerre) and munch oysters; view the river as Sisley painted it: lovely barges, bustling tugs, great elms on stone banks, plane trees and poplars, pushing back any loneliness.

Afternoon light, writing stories in a favorite sidewalk café, while drinking a café crème. Knowing time would stretch out and let you get everything done that you needed to do in your life. So much we learned by watching the long-flowing Seine.

Saying goodbye to a city is harder than whispering adieu to a lover.

When I Die
Karen Forslin-Bojnansky

The moment, the date when God calls me back, I aspire to know to keep me on track.

As a teenager, almost died once left its horror and deep scar.
Angelic visitation Divine intervention fear of Death no more.

Precious time, cherished people in and out of my life, Left pictures, many stories of love, hate and strife.

My goal, to be authentic not façade, masked or fake, Live honestly, love openly strive to give and not take.

My life, races past me endless duties, moments few until I gaze into God’s eyes and ask “How did I do?”

When Death visits, that final day my Spirit leaves its abode, Know I’m ecstatic, full yet empty, traveling Soul side on God’s road.