

Fall 12-1-2016

Hemingway on the Left Bank

Mardelle Fortier
College of DuPage

Follow this and additional works at: <http://dc.cod.edu/plr>

Recommended Citation

Fortier, Mardelle (2016) "Hemingway on the Left Bank," The Prairie Light Review: Vol. 39 : No. 1 , Article 15.
Available at: <http://dc.cod.edu/plr/vol39/iss1/15>

This Selection is brought to you for free and open access by the College Publications at DigitalCommons@COD. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Prairie Light Review by an authorized editor of DigitalCommons@COD. For more information, please contact koteles@cod.edu.

Hemingway on the Left Bank

Paris was enormous,
full of artists
in creative cross-fertilization.
We lived among poor workers
next to a saw-mill.
The apartment was drafty and old.
I loved it.

Each day I wrote, first in a cramped office, later in cafes. Coffee helped me, wine helped even more.

I tried to find the one true sentence

in that one right place
Paris.

In Paris

The evenings of September are warm and seductive. On sidewalk cafes, talk must be clever and lively: fashion, cinema, artists, amour. Champagne must be sparkling
even though that kiss
will only be a promise.

In October, fallen leaves will be plastered to cobblestones haunted by longing and memories.
Walking through rain lamplit rooms glimpsed from the street.

The ghost of something in the air.
Tonight, stars--white flames,
touchable by readers and lovers.
Lights twinkle by the ever-flowing Seine.
Bridges seem to lead somewhere connecting one's half of the city to some unique magic that can never be destroyed.

Mardelle Fortier

“Lilies for Mom”
Colored pencil, acrylic paint, stencil, and molding paste on drawing paper
by Marge Dady