THE PRAIRIE LIGHT REVIEW

Spring 2007 - Volume XXVII, No. II

Morning

Most mornings I rise late and rush past the world to my day
But on this morning
I find myself awake early
Alone, I am paused in my thoughts

It is still outside
The trees are in slumber
The sun is stretching itself awake
The morning frost crisp on grass and leaf

All paths are uncharted
All harm and good forgotten

THE DAY WAITS

I risk everything
And step outside

--Paul Sorenson
