The Day That Never Happened

Joshua Ziemann
College of DuPage

Follow this and additional works at: https://dc.cod.edu/plr

Recommended Citation Available at: https://dc.cod.edu/plr/vol25/iss2/66

This Selection is brought to you for free and open access by the College Publications at DigitalCommons@COD. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Prairie Light Review by an authorized editor of DigitalCommons@COD. For more information, please contact orenick@cod.edu.
The Day That Never Happened
by Joshua Ziemann to morn I cross a threshold dear a-soak with wine of utter hope fermented fruit of love in fear through darkness for your hand I grope for fully one un-tinctured day I coughed on turgid water dun though tempest tossed, awash in splay I burned quite dry beneath no sun your silence sword can never pierce nor render me a fate so fair as rend from me this love so fierce and eyes so soaked from utter care for You I clawed and called today to slash vain hope and simply let me die

Frayed Edges
by Maureen Tolman Flannery

She is a truculent girl on the frayed edges of several worlds.
She loves the parents she does not resemble, knows the chrome-hard kids she hangs with whose souls are nothing like her own, studies among those who live nearby and thinks she doesn't look like one of them.
She curses away the people she most cares about and fills the voided space with safe replacements.
With her little-girlness wandering and seldom coming back, she covers her darkness in black and sometimes cuts for color - hibiscus crimson.
And sometimes cuts to see the secret Mayan blood that travels back roads beneath her skin.