

The Prairie Light Review

Volume 13
Number 1 The Dreaming Tree

Article 30

Spring 3-1-1994

Cornucopia

Michael A. Metzler
College of DuPage

Follow this and additional works at: <https://dc.cod.edu/plr>

Recommended Citation

Metzler, Michael A. (1994) "Cornucopia," The Prairie Light Review: Vol. 13 : No. 1 , Article 30.
Available at: <https://dc.cod.edu/plr/vol13/iss1/30>

This Selection is brought to you for free and open access by the College Publications at DigitalCommons@COD. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Prairie Light Review by an authorized editor of DigitalCommons@COD. For more information, please contact orenick@cod.edu.

Cornucopia

by Michael A. Metzler

Oh beautiful feast, the least we can do is make your parting painless, our hands stainless.

The very least.

Brontosaurus, Stegosaurus—Rhinoceros.
Your name is like theirs.
Your fame will follow theirs.
Extinct. On the brink of destruction we find you.
We cornered you.
And for what, Black Rhino?

Your wonderful horn of plenty.

Its power to make us well, excel. We fell you like almighty oak in a quest for your strongest branch.
But we can't take your branch without taking you. Your power. Your being.

I see you fade now, your soul poached in a dusty sack. On the back of your betrayer it swings free.
As you are free now. Tormented no more by the chase, your face finds peace beneath the blood.
You like where you once stood strong and black and beautiful.
But your horn for us was bountiful.
So we took
And we'll take.
And we'll take.

Oh, Black Rhino, go.
Go find your peace.
For you'll have none here
as long as we are taking.
And we'll have none here
as long as we are taking.

