Face For Radio

Ronda Crawford
College of DuPage

Follow this and additional works at: https://dc.cod.edu/plr

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://dc.cod.edu/plr/vol40/iss2/18
A Face for Radio

I believe smart women with interesting things to say shouldn’t have to take pictures but they do. I learned early that what I think no matter how relevant or intriguing is going to be heard at a volume that is filtered through how light reflects or is absorbed by my skin. That these judgments are made sometimes in millimeter measurements of shapes and angles, which is why I hate taking pictures, but only of myself. It’s the long odds, that out of 50 pictures only one will be good. 1 in 50. I set a reminder to myself to make a list of all the things that have such odds.

Once, as part of an exercise, I was asked what my ideal job would be, and I said radio personality. No one would care if I wore makeup or if I had on pants. I could verbalize all the witty and intelligent thoughts that float through my head without judgement, and someone would actually give me money to do this. But the best part is no one would know what I looked like. And when I met people, they would always be surprised and say things like I didn’t expect you to have freckles or be tall or black or wear glasses. And I would laugh because my face would be an unexpected gift that would shatter all preconceived notions, because no one would think that I look like this.

-Ronda Crawford