It could have been
some '40's movie.
Four girls, Bette Davis-like
on a picnic table in the park,
their long legs in skirts and shorts.
Laughter moved within the group,
haughty and rich.
Seemingly oblivious,
there were well-executed
glances at men who walked by,
and hair so carefully head-tossed
at the right moments.
A "notice me, don't bother me"
attitude was the perfumed scent,
subtle enough,
but unmistakably alluring.
I expected Bogart at any moment;
maybe they did too.
College girls,
on the spring green.
