The Prairie Light Review

Volume 1 | Number 3

Article 7

Spring 6-7-1982

Analysis

Julie Kurns College of DuPage

Follow this and additional works at: https://dc.cod.edu/plr

Recommended Citation

Kurns, Julie (1982) "Analysis," The Prairie Light Review: Vol. 1 : No. 3 , Article 7. Available at: https://dc.cod.edu/plr/vol1/iss3/7

This Selection is brought to you for free and open access by the College Publications at DigitalCommons@COD. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Prairie Light Review by an authorized editor of DigitalCommons@COD. For more information, please contact orenick@cod.edu.

Poetry Contest Selections

First Place

Reunion

Run Child. Run. Across the morning meadows Frozen in my mind... Where skinned knees and Bruised elbows are healed With a kiss. Where Hearts don't bleed.

Come back to me With your treasured crown Of laurel leaves. Don't you know You ran too soon. Too far. Before I even got to know you.

Run Child! Run! Across the surface Of some forgotten time Before the darkness comes Before you trip over The one smooth stone They will place In your path.

Patricia Hiscock

The Executive Farmer

His garden retreat... Where the silent sounds Of cabbages growing Soak up all the telephones and trains Where aphids and beetles Are enemies out in the open Not disguised as friends In tailored suits and Florsheim shoes Where dirt is dirt and weeds are weeds Where he is but a tall, worn man Standing taller still while stooping In a simple garden plot That stretches like a tiny path Through the middle years of life.

Patricia Hiscock

The Tree You Ordered

Arrived Two weeks after you left. Dormant roots Seeking water. Space. I didn't have the heart To plant it Nor the heart To watch it die.

It reminded me Of us.

Patricia Hiscock

Analysis

Second Place

On Reading "Double Image"

by Anne Sexton

I read again your poem "Double Image" and see reflections of my self – my life. Women with children, a daughter, asking for definition – wandering through vital years we may not know again. Women whose mothers are no longer gods but human — frail, growing old, searching too. Our uellowing portraits cherished because what we paint now is too painful to discern.

I also remember summers of corridors and walls, making trivets and key holders, but little more than that.

My heart and eyes and head swell as I know you chose your calendars end turning abruptly from a mirror that no longer contained a 'double image'.

mons@COD, 1982

Julie Kurns

You took my thoughts, twisted and wrinkled they were, and ironed them — steam — on hot.

Took the streaks and folds out and left me with my statements crisp, same without flaw — starched, cold but laundry — new, nonetheless.

You need to know in time, wrinkles return.

Julie Kurns

Your Voice

Soft, resonant, whipped with cream broken by cigarette puffs and deep laughter, lulling, cajoling, you tease me.

I hear each breath you take; feel your sensualness. I picture you and am consumed --

Swallowed up again by your voice.

Julie Kurns

Publi