The Prairie Light Review

Volume 1 | Number 3

Spring 6-7-1982

Slow Circle

Lawrence Scott Kees

College of DuPage

Follow this and additional works at: https://dc.cod.edu/plr

Recommended Citation

Available at: https://dc.cod.edu/plr/vol1/iss3/32

This Selection is brought to you for free and open access by the College Publications at DigitalCommons@COD. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Prairie Light Review by an authorized editor of DigitalCommons@COD. For more information, please contact orenick@cod.edu.
A Drive

I drove a country road
Fields of corn
On rolling hills
How I yearned
To stop
The old farmer
sitting high on his tractor
"Excuse me, sir," I would say.
"But could I hop on?"
and pretend
He would look amazed, no doubt
As I would have too
But I would explain
that it had been a long time
Since I rode, open faced to the wind,
Down a bumpy dirt road
Edging comfortably
a green field of corn
But I drove past
the farmer
and his fields
And turned back to home
Knowing I left the country Loving it as always Remembering when a patch of it was mine.

Louise Kolakovich

A Writing Rule of Thumb:
The verbosity of any writer is inversely proportional to his understanding of the subject matter.

George A. Whittington

Power And Direction

I will always remember
the roads I've traveled.
The eyes looked into,
the minds seen through.
Grounds that I've stood on,
horizons drawn upon.
Bridges that I've crossed,
jeans that I've tossed.
Mountains climbed,
deserts with endless sunshine.
I will always remember
the roads
I've traveled.
For they have taken
the badlands of my memory
and formed new roads to travel.
Where now, I could never get lost.
Only find another way.

Joan Leindecker

Slow Circle

It's a slow circle: this world of Earth.
If only the wrestling grasses could feel its turn.
If only the changing tides could yearn.
Similar to myself, this confused search;
Turning in days and living to find,
What questions? What answers? Truth:
If only I were a blade in the grasses,
If only I were a wave lost in tide,
no doubts, questions, worries, or truths.

Lawrence Scott Kees