

The Prairie Light Review

Volume 42 | Number 2

Article 47

Spring 5-1-2020

Walk in the Park

Karlette Murray
College of DuPage

Follow this and additional works at: <https://dc.cod.edu/plr>

Recommended Citation

Murray, Karlette (2020) "Walk in the Park," The Prairie Light Review. Vol. 42 : No. 2 , Article 47.
Available at: <https://dc.cod.edu/plr/vol42/iss2/47>

This Artwork is brought to you for free and open access by the College Publications at DigitalCommons@COD. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Prairie Light Review by an authorized editor of DigitalCommons@COD. For more information, please contact orenick@cod.edu.

Murray: Walk in the Park

the sins of the world are cast up into the blood-crimson light, hurriedly awaiting to be hidden by the dark cover of night, where shame and sorrow dwell. But when the dawn comes, all of those sins are gone, and the day begins afresh. No regrets of the past are to be known here.

Every day it is thus between the sun and the moon, between day and night: rise and fall, rise and fall. Each one succeeds for a time before she is toppled by her relentless opponent. Each does what the other cannot, and that is from whence their rivalry sprung. Neither has lost, and neither has won... and oh, they are so very different!

And so you see? That is why I have little love for sunsets - they are the reminder of all that has been lost in the day. And that is why I have great admiration for sunrises - they are the reminder of all that may be gained in a day. They show forth courage and beauty and deliver a promise that the sun will always rise, and tell that there will always be another tomorrow.

Walk in the Park
Karlette Murray