A Lake, Not an Ocean
Matthew Kimball

While the waves become restless, and the air wilder,
You must remember the wounds possessed prior.
The lake may be less serene,
But it lacks the darker ocean's green.
The size is something that shouldn't be mistaken,
No matter how hard you are forsaken.
The problem seems big at the moment
But it shall not leave a large atonement.
The light hidden behind clouds shall be seen,
To the ports, you have been.
