northbound flight

GABRIELA DZIEKAN

In my youth springtime was spent at a retention pond greeting the returning geese from their northbound flight Offered whatever stale bread I could muster up from my pantry walking home with weary eyes became familiar I was never able to feed them all no matter what technique was used one always reigned supreme The hisses ring within the cathedrals of my mind it wasn't my fault but somehow I could have done more looking back
It seems I've been given more than proposed gifted a heart too big for my body trained to never leave any for me Somewhere between the pews of this holy church horrible habits came to be.
