Flowing in the Wind

Melissa Morgan
College of DuPage
Steal me away to where you wish to go Pretend we don't exist. No place to call our own Abandonment leaves a bread crumb trail
Yet others have eaten the path away

Echoes off the black cave provoking emotions
Fire's flashlight creates an orange tint on your face
We don't explain, compare, contrast, no tall tales
Only a realization: together is our destined location

Town to town like stepping stones across the heavy roaring river Glide over grassy mountain waves there's always one after the next Hear thunder calling once more outstretched arms welcome a storm
You place a dampened flower between my fingers turning down the wayward prairie

Our brief appearance makes me very uncomfortable Deep hand painted skies urge us onward Sprinkle more crumbs as landmarks go by We fade away never turning around