The Cemetery: Savage Repose

Teri Lavelle

College of DuPage

Follow this and additional works at: http://dc.cod.edu/plr

Recommended Citation

Available at: http://dc.cod.edu/plr/vol38/iss2/25

This Selection is brought to you for free and open access by the College Publications at DigitalCommons@COD. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Prairie Light Review by an authorized administrator of DigitalCommons@COD. For more information, please contact koteles@cod.edu.
1. Our dead, precious and still, are collected like butterflies and pinned to white satin for display. At ritual’s end, they are swallowed whole and sink like frogs, beneath Earth’s loamy pudding. Their bones become a mystery to daylight.

2. Time, that weighty changeling, bears down on them, as gravity unwinds geology. There they are settling, mud-sucked and mold-resplendent, a fleshy repast for the small and beastly.

3. Beneath a stone-riddled field, all of them: farmers and dilettantes, anarchists and clergymen, all are lying parallel and supine, unblinking and inert, refuting a grace that never comes. “Why practice temperance?” They call to us. “Rocks melt, and mountains disembowel. Igneous begets sedimentary. Yet in the end, all is metamorphic and one.”