Spring 5-1-1997

Growing Old; Or, Variant Graces

Chikako D. Kumamoto

College of DuPage

Follow this and additional works at: http://dc.cod.edu/plr

Recommended Citation

Available at: http://dc.cod.edu/plr/vol17/iss2/60

This Selection is brought to you for free and open access by the College Publications at DigitalCommons@COD. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Prairie Light Review by an authorized editor of DigitalCommons@COD. For more information, please contact koteles@cod.edu.
Growing Old; Or, Variant Graces

By: Chikako D. Kumamoto

If I must grow old, let me not by the argument of the mirror,
Though each morning, loyal to its silver voice of reason
It tells the tragedy of my grays, lines, and darkening spots,
While I, a fugitive from the Time police,
Plot youth with sophistry.

If I must grow old, then let it be becomingly done,
So that lies may not be prolonged, so that
My face, my body, and all variants of my past grace
May grow like the sum of a sunflower that follows
The steps of the sun, as surely as the ripening seeds inside,
From what it once was, to be what it is now,
To be what it will become, from roots to flowers to roots,
Seeking after that sweet golden face,
Maturing, spent but never meaning less.

In growing old I live myself
As stirring as that highsummer plant that will yield
For now time keeps in all of me and does not flee.
I, who once hid away, was afraid,
Arise and seize the sun.